

Values

Human Centric Values are a distortion of the natural order.

For centuries we have seen the world through our eyes. How can it serve us. How can WE live forever, how can WE escape sickness and death.

By seeing ourselves as outside of the systems of life we have created the catastrophe that well may be our own death warrant.

Fortunately nature is resilient and so are we. Nature is also forgiving, but to obtain her forgiveness we need to realign our lives to the cycles and rhythms of nature and Resilient Values help us do that.

Kathryn Alexander, MA

I have been obsessed by values and trying to better understand why people do what they do – AND why it doesn't seem to work out as planned. I was captivated by the work of Jane Jacobs who posited two systems of values.

I developed the Resilient Value Set™ based on the work of Janine Benyus, David Suzuki, Thomas Berry, Wendell Berry, and others.

If we work with the values that sustain nature – we can't go wrong.

The Resilient Values Set™

Kathryn Alexander, MA

Regenerative

Every system we have is either failing or in dire need of repair. Those who wish to mimic nature talk about the ability to regenerate new systems that are distributive and even 'generous.' This means moving beyond zero waste to actually be able to contribute value to the community and the planet in everything we do. We too, need to be regenerative! We offer assessment, coaching and consulting to help you and your organization move forward by aligning with the planet.
